

Educational Trip for an Immigrant Student: Check His Story Out!

Help student meet, February 9th, 2017 strict deadline

Mohammed is a senior, at a high school in Louisville, KY. He is originally from Iraq. His family and he have been working very hard to send Mohammed on an educational trip to London and Paris, this spring 2018, with his school. However, due to medical issues, job-setbacks and excessive bills, they cannot afford the entire cost of the trip.

As his teachers, we'd like to give you a quick background on Mohammed, to help you understand why we think this trip is such a great opportunity for him. Mohammed is a young man who did not receive education until the age of ten when his family and he migrated to the United States. It was not until he moved to the United States that he received access to language. Once he was able to access language, this young man has fought to learn, not only his native language of Arabic, but English at the same time. This has not been an easy task for this young man. However, he has persevered and continues to strive to overcome the obstacles he has faced. His tireless work ethic and will to learn are truly impressive. He never complains, only smiles.

He desires to see the world, he is eager to continue learning and to not let anything stop him from carrying out his dreams. His determination is inspiring; we know this trip will help him substantiate his passion to learn, overcome and complete his dreams.

Educational travel allows students the opportunity to be thrown into a new culture and language, to see history face to face, to embark on the unknown and to most importantly ...grow as a human.
